CARS BADLY NEEDED

Lumber Business of Northwest Almost Tied up.

TWENTY THOUSAND ORDERED

Immense Plants in Centralia at a Standstill—Some Railroads Will Not Send a Car Off Their Lines—Dubious Outlook for Winter Trade.

There is a railway car famine in the Northwest of very considerable proportions, and while the lower Columbia river country has not yet felt the pressure to the same pinching degree experienced by other sections, it is slowly but surely working its way down here, and the cry for "more cars" is likely to resound from this valley soon, and vociferously. The situation is very acute. And what makes it worse is the simple fact there is not rolling stock in the West, to relieve it. Many mills in the Northwest must close down for want of means to export their output. They are, in fact, closing down daily. In the face of a splendid demand for lumber, at good prices, they are absolutely blocked by a shortage of cars, while last year, with a paucity of orders, and meager prices for the output, there was an abundance of cars everywhere.

An Astorian just in from Centralia declares the limitations along this line are felt with almost ruinous effect. George Birge, manager there of the Lumber Manufacturers' Agency, with twelve mills in operation and putting out a million feet per day, reported 270 carloads of lumber in the yards awaiting transportation, and that in the next thirty days his people will have stuff ready for 800 cars, and not a wheel to turn for them. The purchasing agent of the Northwestern Railway Company, now building a line from Pierre, South Dakota, into the Black Hills, who was in Centralia, says his company is short 200 cars for sending out working material on his line and have to use flat cars for getting lumber to the front.

The purchasing agent of the Grand Trunk system is out West buying material for the construction of 8000 new cars and cannot say how he is going to get it back East.

The Harriman system has placed orders for material for the construction of 8000 new cars. The Northern Pacific is providing for the construction of 7000 more cars. And thus the tale goes on. The Northern Pacific is confining its cars to its own lines, and shippers are putting up transfer charges in advance on bills of lading.

The situation is one of extremely sensitive and perilous conditions and may result in heavy disaster to one of the greatest industries on the Pacific slope. Cars must be had, and will be, but the cost of getting them is certain to rush the price lists of lumber to a prohibitive point, or else vast schemes of building industry must be turned down for the winter to await the access of hauling facilities now underway, but scarcely available before spring opens.
